High-Risk Pools: Policy Goals and Evidence

Goal
Trinity Health is committed to public policies that support better health, better care and lower costs to ensure affordable, high-quality, people-centered care for all. As Trinity Health assesses key components of Affordable Care Act (ACA) replacement proposals, it is important to review the pros and cons associated with each proposal and to evaluate the impact on coverage and access to affordable, high-quality, people-centered care.

Background & Purpose
High-risk pools have traditionally been used to provide coverage to individuals unable to purchase non-group insurance due to pre-existing or high-cost conditions since 1976. In 2008, 35 states operated high-risk pools, covering about 200,000 individuals. The ACA also established temporary high-risk pools – Pre-Existing Condition Insurance Plans (PCIPs) – before the coverage expansion went into effect in 2014. Currently, several ACA repeal and replace plans include high-risk pools to cover those with pre-existing or high-cost conditions. The table below provides the “pros” and “cons” of high-risk pools. This information is based on available research and evidence assessing impact, feasibility and success.

<tr>
<td>Create high-risk pools to provide coverage to high-cost individuals</td>
<td>• Removing the highest cost individuals from the individual market can lower costs for healthy individuals. • Can improve access to coverage for those with pre-existing conditions if current insurance market reforms are weakened.</td>
<td>• Costs to enrollees and government have historically been very high. • Pools have been administratively burdensome and expensive to operate for states. • Access to the pools has been limited due to enrollment caps and insufficient funds.</td>

Overall Takeaway – High-risk pools have had limited success in ensuring access to those with pre-existing conditions, and have also been financially prohibitive to enrollees and states.

Trinity Health Supports policies that promote affordable coverage that incentivizes people to purchase insurance and responsibly use health care services.
